Workshop I: Supporting the Development and Achievement of Students of Color
 SAINTE CLAIRE ROOM
 ■ Thomas Brown, Managing Principal, Thomas Brown & Associates
 ■ Mario Rivas, Vice President Student Services, Vista College

Increasing numbers of students will arrive at college ill-prepared academically and psychologically for the challenges of college life. If these students are to have a reasonable chance for success, they will need a campus environment conducive to meeting their special needs. This workshop will provide insight into what faculty and campuses can do to improve the success of a diverse student population.

Workshop II: Developing Research Partnerships: Challenges & Benefits
 SANTA CRUZ ROOM
 ■ Cynthia A. Gomez, Director, Health Equity Initiatives, San Francisco State University
 ■ Rafael Diaz, Professor, Ethnic Studies, and Director, César E. Chávez Institute, San Francisco State University

This workshop will include discussion of a broad set of partnerships—CBO partnerships, funder partnerships, and peer partnerships. The workshop will provide participants with the principles and methods of community-based participatory research, as well as program evaluation and other research skills that enhance the capacity of both the academic research and community-based partners.

Workshop III: Diversity and Community Engagement
 SANTA VESTA ROOM
 ■ Rona T. Halalani, Associate Professor, Communication Studies, San Jose State University

This workshop is designed to highlight the role of diversity in engaging and interacting with cultural communities. Cultural patterns, communication frameworks, and community organizing models that span identity and discuss a valuable process of dialogic inquiry that enables faculty to uncover key information about a community and thoughtfully and respectfully interact with a community.

Workshop IV: Moving from Research to Advocacy
 SARATOGA ROOM
 ■ Joely De La Torre, Associate Professor, Public Administration, and Director of

Context Diversity: A New Paradigm for Higher Education and Beyond
 ■ Roberto A. Ibarra, Associate Professor of Sociology and former Special Assistant to the President and Provost for Diversity, University of New Mexico

During the last half of the 20th century, higher education struggled to increase the diversity of faculty, students, and staff on

Tribal Government, Management and Leadership, CSU San Bernardino
 ■ Raquelle Myers, Staff Attorney, National Indian Justice Center

Native American communities are often the subjects of important research projects conducted by government and education institutions. Unfortunately, a great deal of the research conducted in Indian country rarely results in solutions for Indian country. This workshop will provide an overview of existing research data concerning Native American communities in the areas of telecommunication, rights of way for energy development, transportation safety, and fetal alcohol syndrome. This workshop will explore strategies for Indian tribes and the research entities to move from data gathering to implementing change. The lessons learned from these experiences are applicable to any community seeking positive social change.

Session 1

A new paradigm has emerged called Context Diversity that is redefining common assumptions about the definition of diversity and how it works. This paradigm suggests that the dilemmas of diversity are associated with conflicts between the context of traditional university teaching and learning environments and the context of different learners and scholars entering higher education. These conflicts can be resolved with application of guiding principles of a new Multicontextual Theory that embraces civic engagement and community-based learning as the foundation for reframing higher education for the 21st century.
